THE SUPERSQUIRREL

NUTSY, the squirrel, was having the most wonderful time! He'd tied a big red cape about his shoulders, and the strong wind that was blowing caught it and whisked him into the air time and time again.

Nutsy didn't know that Big-Shot Hippo, ringmaster of the Animal Circus, was watching him in amazement. He jumped as Big-Shot spoke. "What—what sort of a squirrel are you?"

It was too good an opportunity to miss. Giggling, the little squirrel replied. "Why, I'm Supersquirrel, of course! I fly through the air with the greatest of ease—and I can do this any time!"

Big-Shot's words showed that he was impressed. "You're hired, Supersquirrel! Be at the big top tomorrow at two—ready for your greatest performance! But remember—if you let me down, I'll sue you for misrepresentation! I'll send you to jail for five years!"

Nutsy was a mighty scared squirrel as the big hippo walked away. He knew he couldn't really fly and was no Supersquirrel—his boastful tongue had gotten him into trouble again! There was no wind under the big top that could catch his cape and send him swirling into the air—and if he failed, prison bars awaited him! What to do? His heart leaped as he thought of his friend, Bertie Bluejay. Maybe he could teach him to fly!

But Bertie wasn't very encouraging. "You might as well give up!" he said. "Your type of squirrel can't fly!" He couldn't help feeling sorry for Nutsy, though, and watching his little friend depart forlornly, a great idea came to him. He summoned the birds of the woodland to a hurried conference.

Came the next day, and poor Nutsy slunk toward the circus lot. He was afraid not to show up, for all around Animaltown posters screamed, "DON'T MISS NUTSY, THE GREAT SUPERSQUIRREL! HE FLIES THROUGH THE BIG TOP AT 2 TODAY!" But he was all atremble as the time came for his act, and he walked to the center of the ring. The applause was deafening, and he stood rooted to the spot. "Go ahead!" hissed Big-Shot, nudging him sharply. "Get off the ground! Fly!"

What was little Nutsy to do? There wasn't a puff of air under the big top. Why had he lied so boastfully? Despairingly he ran a little—tried to hop into the air—and then it happened! With a rush, he felt himself flying from the ground! Diving and soaring exultantly, he zoomed over the heads of the cheering spectators—the greatest exhibition that Animaltown had ever seen!

A few hours after the show, the proud Nutsy caught sight of Bertie Bluejay, accompanied by a group of his bird friends. "Take a look at Supersquirrel himself!" he called exultantly. "Too bad ya didn't catch my performance!"

"Catch your performance?" asked Bertie scornfully. "You dope, I was your performance! Me an' Sammy Sparrow an' Roscoe Robin an' the boys here! We felt sorry for you, see? And when you flew under the big top this afternoon—that was just us, grabbin' your cape from above an' treatin' you to a free ride! Supersquirrel, phooey!"

PONGO'S WILD RIDE

"THE coast is clear!" Pongo Pig thought, as he darted through old Farmer Goat's apple orchard. "He'll never catch me now!"

Pongo had just "helped himself" to a good many of the old farmer's crisp, red apples and he wanted to leave before he was discovered. "Boy, I can't wait to eat 'em," he thought happily, licking his lips. "That old goat raises the best crop o' apples around here an' I . . ."

"Drop them apples, ya young scallawag!" the farmer's voice interrupted Pongo's day-dreams. "Give 'em back!"

Pongo started to run! He wasn't going to give up any of the apples he had . . . er . . . "found," and no old goat was going to make him! But the farmer had other ideas, and he could run pretty fast, too!

Soon, Pongo found himself racing as fast as he could go, with Farmer Goat in hot pursuit. "He's gettin' closer!" the little pig said. "An' these apples are gettin' heavier! If there wuz only some shortcut . . . that's it! Shortcut! He'll never stop me!"

Pongo slipped under the barbed wire that marked off a grassy field where Farmer Goat's prize bull grazed. He could see the farmer coming closer and closer, and the little pig was desperate. "My handkerchief!" he exclaimed. "It's red!"

Seizing one corner of his red kerchief, Pongo waved it furiously at the dangerous-looking bull. "Yah-yah!" he called. "Come an' get me!"

The bull did not wait for a second invitation. Lowering his head, he dashed straight for Pongo Pig, his eyes flashing and his nostrils quivering!

"Hurry up!" Pongo encouraged the bull. "That ol' farmer'll be here in a second!"

Snorting, the bull pawed the ground for an instant. Then, with a light toss, he scooped Pongo up on his sharp, curved horns and threw him just as far as he could!

Way over to the other end of the field, out of reach of old Farmer Goat, sailed Pongo Pig until he came down to earth again with a sharp smack!

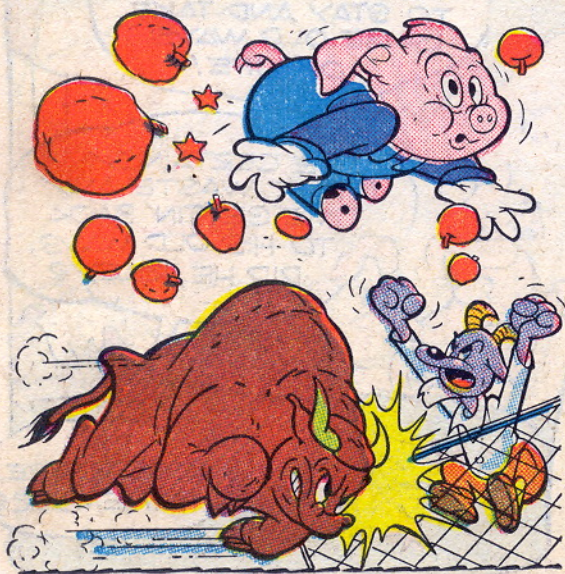

"OUCH!" the little pig said. "That hurt! I won't be able to sit down again for weeks! An' . . . oh, golly! My overalls are all torn where that bull caught me! What'll mom say? Well, anyhow, that ol' farmer can't catch me anymore, an' I've got all those good-tastin' apples . . . hey!"

Pongo could hardly believe his eyes. Scattered over the field he had just crossed, in a long, tempting row, were all of his apples! He had dropped them in his flight for safety!

"Oh, golly!" he said again, tears coming to his eyes. "Guess I'm not so smart, after all! No apples! All I've got to show is a pair o' torn overalls an' achin' back!"

As he turned to leave, Farmer Goat's voice came to him across the field. "Wal, ya young rascal! I guess that'll show ya! Mebbe ya'll believe now that crime ain't exactly a payin' proposition!"

Pongo Pig looked back remorsefully at Farmer Goat. "It sure isn't!" he agreed heartily. "I'll never try it again!"

The DESPERADO

DAVY DUCK shivered with fright as he looked at the large poster nailed on the tree trunk. It was a large, brightly-colored poster that read "Wanted! Bozo Bear! For forgery, burglary, larceny and lots of other crimes! Dangerous!" There was also a picture of Bozo Bear, as nasty and mean-looking as a bear could look!

"Whew!" said Davy, shivering again. "I wouldn't like ta run into him! He's just the biggest, baddest, toughest bear I ever . . ."

"See anything, bub?" a rough voice growled into Davy's ear.

Davy whirled around, and his heart sank right through his little webbed feet into the earth below. He was looking straight at Bozo Bear!

The little duck thought fast. He had to, because Bozo's face was getting angrier and meaner by the second. "S . . . see anything?" Davy repeated. "Oh, n . . . : no, of course not!"

"Then what'cha lookin' at that poster fer? An' then at me?" the bear demanded.

"It's just that . . . just that . . . you look so much like the picture on the poster!" Davy talked fast. "Folks might think you're Bozo Bear! In fact, you might even get arrested, instead of him!"

"Say, that's right!" the bear agreed. "H'mmm . . ."

"I have an idea that might help you," Davy offered eagerly. "If you changed your looks, so you didn't look like the poster, you'd be safe!"

"You're pretty smart," said Bozo Bear. "I'll try that!" He turned and started to walk away, but Davy Duck thought even faster than before.

"Wait!" he called. "I can help you!"

The huge bear came back to Davy. "Okay," he said, "whaddaya got in mind?"

"Well, the very first thing is your hat!" Davy answered, reaching for a heavy log on the ground nearby. "We'll have to change its shape. Don't take it off . . . keep it on! Just bend down, so's I can reach you!"

Bozo bent his head down, and little Davy Duck, raising the log as high as he could, brought it down on the tough bear's head! Smack! As the log connected, the bear sank groggily to the ground, his eyes closing.

"Well!" said Davy, looking down at the unconscious bear. "I changed the shape of your hat, all right! Now for some other changes!"

Quickly, he stripped the bear of his shirt. "These sleeves make mighty good handcuffs," he said, tying Bozo's hands tightly together. "And *feet*cuffs, too," he added, securing the bear's feet.

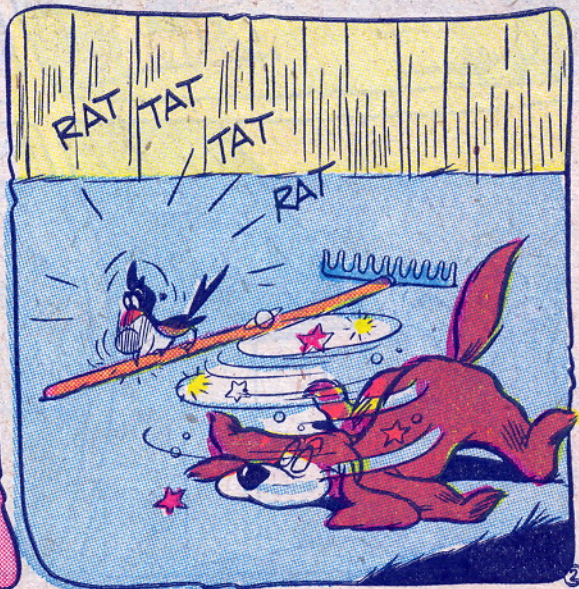

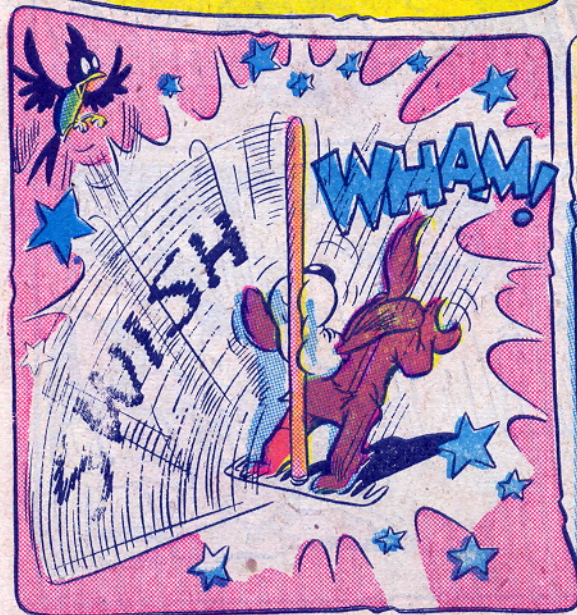

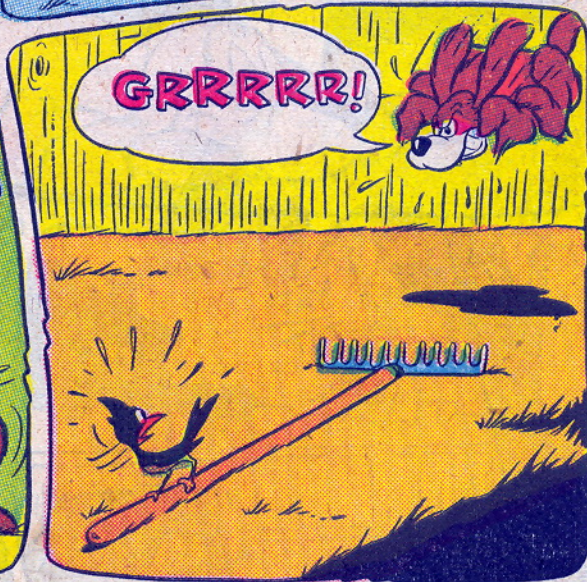

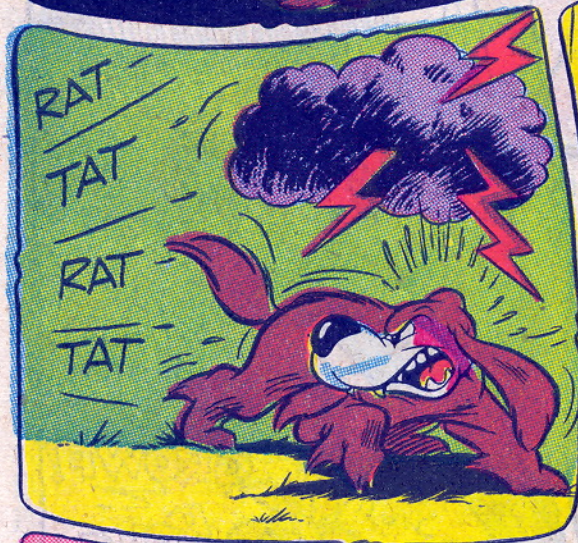

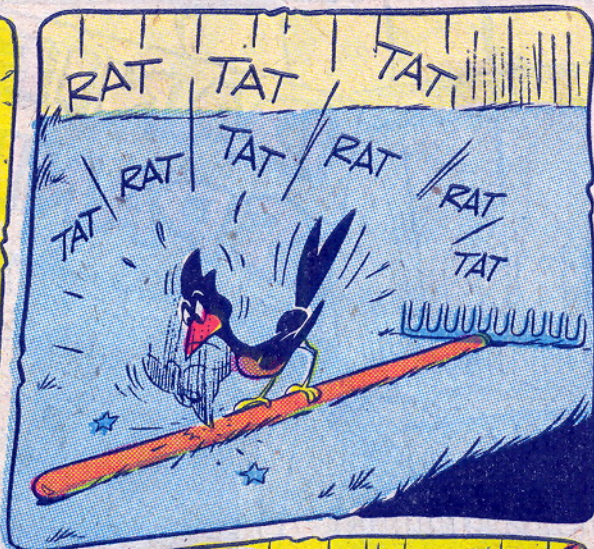

As fast as he could, Davy ran off to the Little Town Police Station. "I've got him! I've got him!" he squeaked. "Come with me!"

When the police came to arrest Bozo, the tough bear was just about beginning to wake up. He tried to put up a fight, but there were too many for him!

As he was being led away, Bozo turned around and said to the Police Captain, "I still don't know wot hit me! But it couldn't a been dat scared-lookin' little duck over dere!"

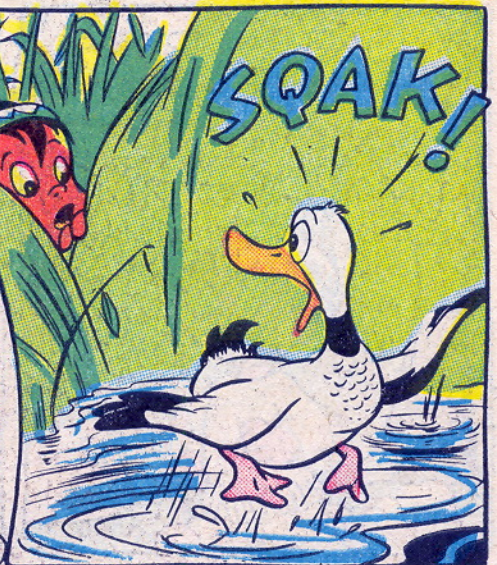

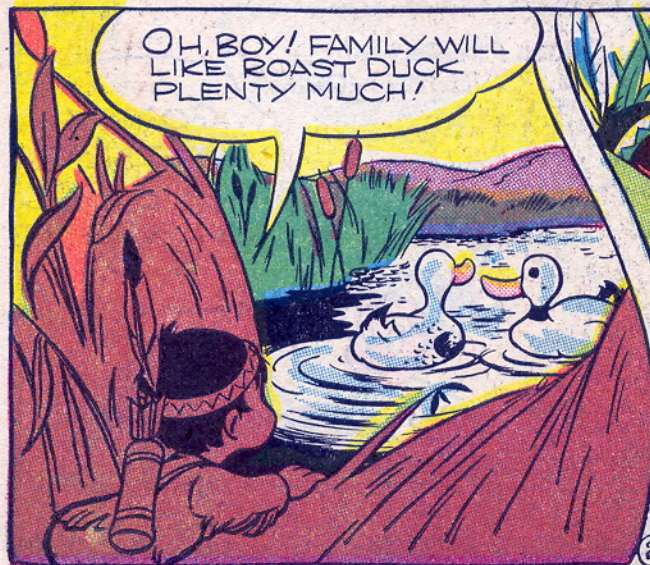

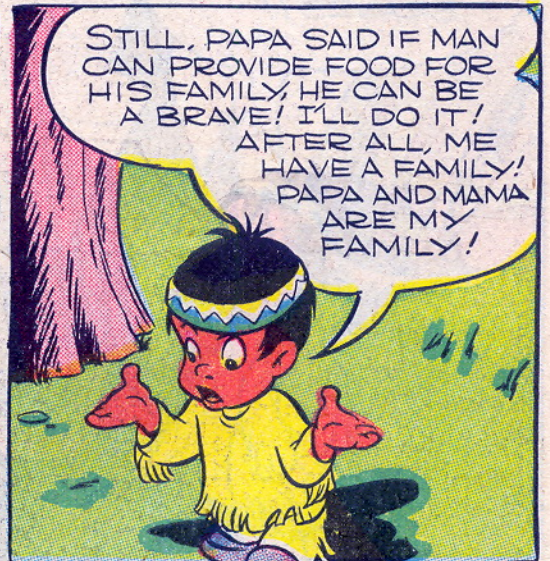

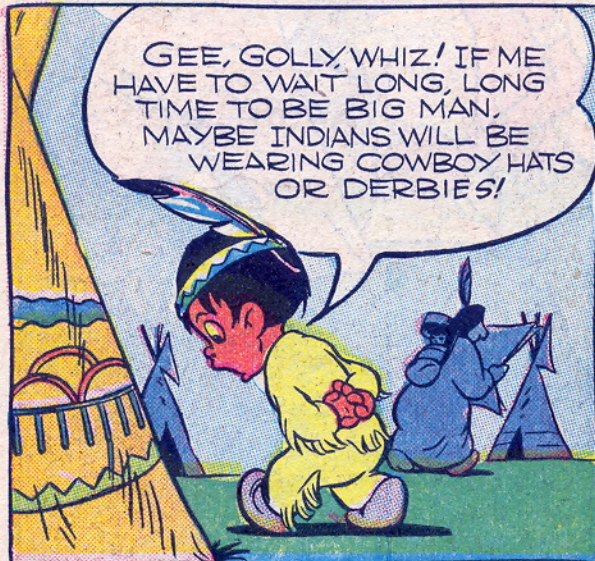

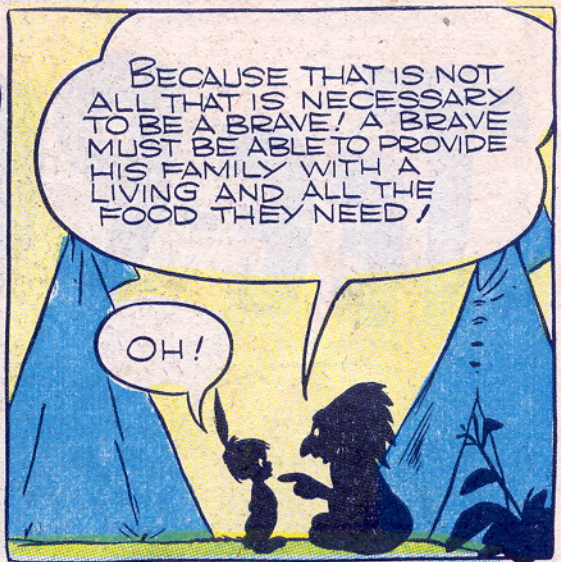

"Oh, no?" the Police Captain asked. "We'll see about that when Davy Duck collects the reward money . . . all by himself!"
